MEDICAL LORE.

FAMOUS PAYNE LIBRARY.

A nightmare awaits the literary hypochondriac. In his leisure the late Dr. John Payne, librarian to the Royal College of Physicians, collected a mass of early medical literature on plague, pestilence, and famine, and the cognate ills of the flesh. Such an extensive library could be collected now only with the greatest difficulty, so that it is merciful to know that when it appears at Sotheby's on July 12 it will first be offered en bloc. A copy of the first book bought by Lord Ashburnham as a schoolboy at Westminster, the foundation of his world-renowned library, the "Secrets" of Albertus Magnus, 1553, is early noticed. Gold "prepared and made potable and medicinable without corrosives" is the substance of Francis Anthony's 1616 work. Naturally there are the works of Aristotle, the Arabian Avicenna, and the Great Galen, not forgetting Celsus and Hippocrates. Richard Banester treats of "one hundred and thirteen diseases of the eye," of "scorby, cancers, and cankers," 1622. When Burton wrote his "Anatomy of Melancholy" he had read Timothy Bright's "Causes thereof, with the phisicke cure and spiritual consolation" (1586). Dr. John Browne's 1684 "Adenochoiradelogia" deals with king's evil swellings, and gives details of cures by "contact or imposition of hands performed for above 640 years by our Kings of England." The virtues of nitre are expounded by Thomas Chaloner in 1584, and Sir Kenelm Digby discourses on the cure of wounds by "the powder of sympathy." With James I. safely at rest, Dr. Giles Everard takes up the cudgels for tobacco, and discloses the "wonderful vertues of tobacco taken in a pipe," and James Ferrand, translates from the French his "Essence, causes, symptoms, prognostics, and cure of love." Dr. John Hull, who married Shakespeare's elder daughter, Susannah, makes select observations on "English bodies of eminent persons in desperate diseases," with directions for "drinking of the Bath-water"; and of course there are Harvey's first edition, 1628, concerning his discovery of the circulation of the blood, and Jenner's 1798 "Inquiry into the Causes and Effects of Cow-pox." Phil May in another incarnation was that Philippe May who wrote, in 1665, "La Chiromancie Medicinale," and as early as 1699 Dr. Edward Tyson was thinking of evolution in his comparisons between the monkey, ape, and man. Works on the plague, in Latin, French, Italian, German, and English, comprise ninety-two lots "When doctors differ" is fully exemplified by the numerous tracts of a polemical kind, of which Noah Biggs's "Vanity of the Craft of Physick, or The New Dispensatory, wherein is Dissected the Errors, Ignorance, Impostures, and Supinities of the Schools," 1651, is a fair specimen. Altogether there is much for a liverish layman to read on a dull day.
